Through his life as a member and as an Apostle, Brigham Young gave unselfishly with no thought of personal gain. He supported himself at home and abroad, and his family were beholden to no one. In addition he assisted in financing the work by his own toil, everywhere he went (see Journal of Discourses, 4:34-35).

Brigham Young was the living example of the spiritual principle taught by the Prophet Joseph Smith: "A religion that does not require the sacrifice of all things never has power sufficient to produce the faith necessary unto life and salvation" (Lectures on Faith 6:7).
